Clinical evaluation of a peptide affinity column for the isolation of anti-P2 antibodies. This study evaluates the usefulness of a peptide affinity column to isolate anti-P2 antibodies. All P2 antibodies (n = 97) isolated by column chromatography have been obtained from subjects with bacteriologically confirmed Streptococcus pneumoniae disease. Sera (n = 155) from subjects with group A streptococcal disease obtained at the time of disease and/or acute-phase serum were also tested. The specificity of the column isolated antibodies was evaluated by use of various ELISA systems and rabbit immunization studies. In addition, the sensitivity of the column purified antibodies was determined by use of an in-house panel of 29 P2 protein antigens including P2 itself. The specificity of the column isolated antibodies was demonstrated by specific immunoassays. Rabbit immunization studies were highly specific for P2 and were the only data supporting the accuracy 1cdb3666d
