Free PDF Download - Architectural Theories of Design George Salvan Free Download in United States v. Locke, 6 Cranch, 237, 8 U. S. 237, 3 L.Ed. 235, which held that a prisoner under writ of habeas corpus was not within the jurisdiction of a court outside the district where he was being held. The appellant also cites United States v. Benz, 282 U.S. 304, 51 S.Ct. 113, 75 L.Ed. 354, in which it is held that the constitutional and statutory provisions for extradition presuppose a surrender for trial after the accused has been charged with a crime in the demanding state. In effect, these cases hold that, for the purpose of obtaining a surrender under these sections of the law, the marshal of the county in which the accused is in custody is without jurisdiction in the district where he is a fugitive from justice. Since the federal government has not consented to his being surrendered for trial, he may not be surrendered if he is not imprisoned in the district. The cases cited above also hold that the statute is wholly unconstitutional in authorizing a surrender for the purpose of prosecution, if the accused has not been charged with a crime in the demanding state. The appellant was charged with a crime by the District of Columbia in the state of Virginia. He has been prosecuted, tried and convicted thereof in the federal court of the district wherein he has been charged and is now imprisoned. Section 3182 of Title 18, U.S.C.A., is unconstitutional insofar as it purports to give the authority to arrest and surrender for trial and punish within the United States. (2) The appellant contends that the legislative history of section 3182 demonstrates that congress did not intend to extend its scope to a fugitive from justice who had been charged with a crime in another state and who was being prosecuted there. In section 3182, which sets out the acts which constitute a crime for which the prisoner may be surrendered, it is provided that the provisions of section 3181 should
